A two-weeker?

Well, I'm back in Knoxville after an enjoyable weekend at home in Memphis. I'm not feeling very cheerful at the moment because we are seriously considering making this a two week stay in Knoxville for me. That means not going home next weekend, but staying here. I have to say, the very thought of that makes my stomach feel a bit queasy. I told Tammy that I'd plan on doing that, with the caveat that I might change my mind by Friday. I look forward to going home every weekend. In a very real way, that's one of the big things that gets me through the week... looking forward to Friday, and heading home. In my mind, it's THE highlight of my week. It's THE thing I'm looking forward to all week.

But the fact is, it costs us $100 (at least) every time I drive home for the weekend. That's 400 bucks a month. Ouch. So, for financial considerations, I have to seriously entertain the idea that I may need to do some two-weekers from time to time... as much as that pains me. :^(

This weekend Tammy bought me a Homedic Shiatzu pillow. This little thing is incredible!! In fact, it's so amazing, that we went out and got a second one for Tammy and Mike to use at home. For me, it's just what the doctor ordered for helping me fight (and recover from) migraines... which, by the way, I had another one today. And on top of that, had to drive 6 hours back to Knoxville. I didn't actually start feeling much better until I was about 100 miles outside of Knoxville. So for most of the drive I was really feeling pretty crappy... on top of the emotional specter of probably pulling a two-weeker. It's been a rather draining day. :^(

But I'm back in Knoxville now with my little Shiatzu pillow calling to me. So I think I'll put that behind my neck for a few minutes and try to wind down.
